No Virtue in Exile

Hae lacrimae Milōnem nōn movent. Incrēdibilem rōborem animi habet. Nisi locus est virtūtī, ibi exsilium esse putat. Mors est nātūrae fīnis, nōn poena. Sīc semper eā mente fuit. Quid vōs, iūdicēs? Quō tandem animō eritis? Memoriam Milōnis retinēbitis, ipsum ēiciētis? Et erit dignior ūllus locus in terrīs qui hanc virtūtem excipiat quam hic, quī prōcreāvit?

Based on Cicero, Prō Milōne, XXXVII, 101

These tears do not move Milo. He has an unbelievable strength of mind. If there is no place for virtue, that place he considered to be exile. Death is the end of nature, not a punishment. He has always been of this opinion. What about you, judges? Of what mind, pray tell, will you be? Will you retain Milo's memory, but take Milo himself? And will there be any more worthy place on earth which would welcome his virtue than this one, which produced him?

HS 2

Cicero Urges Catiline to Depart

Quae cum ita sint, Catilīna, perge, quō coepistī, ēgredere aliquandō ex urbe; patent portae; proficīscere. Nimium diū tē imperātōrem tua illa Mānliāna castra dēsīderant. Ēdūc tēcum etiam omnēs tuōs, sī minus, quam plūrimōs; purgā urbem. Magnō mē metū liberābis, dum modo inter mē atque tē mūrus intersit. Nōbīscum versārī iam diūtius nōn potes; nōn feram, nōn patiar, nōn sinam. Magna dīs immortalibus habenda est atque huic ipsī Iovī Statōrī, antīquissimō cūstōdī huius urbis, grātia, quod hanc tam taetram, tam horribilem tamque īnfestam reī pūblicaē pestem totiēns iam effūgimus.

Cicero, In Catilīnam I, 5

Therefore, Catiline, keep going where you have begun to go, finally get out of the city; the gates are open, leave! Too long that camp of yours under Manlius has desired you as its commander. Lead out with you also all your followers, if less, as many as possible; clean out the city. You will free me from great fear provided that there may be a wall between me and you. You cannot linger with us any longer. I won't tolerate it, I won't endure it, I won't permit it. Great gratitude should be paid to the immortal gods and to this very Jupiter Stator, the most ancient guardian of this city, because we have now escaped so many times this menace, so foul, so horrible, and so dangerous to the republic.

Calgacus Addresses His People in Anticipation of a Roman Invasion

"Quotiēns causās bellī et necessitātem nostram intueor, magnus mihi animus est hodiernum diem cōsēsumque vestrum initium libertātis tōtī Britanniae fore: nam et ūniversī coistis et servitūtis expertēs, et nūllae ultrā terrae ac nē mare quidem sēcūrum imminente nōbīs classe Rōmānā. ... Nunc terminus Britanniae patet, atque omne ignōtum prō magnificō est; sed nūlla iam ultrā gēns, nihil nisi fluctūs ac saxa, et īnfestiōrēs Rōmānī, quōrum superbiam frūstrā per obsequium ac modestiam effugiās. Raptōrēs orbis, postquam cuncta vastantibus dēfuēre terrae, mare scrūtantur: sī locūplēs hostis est, avārī, si pauper, ambitiōsī, quōs nōn Oriēns, nōn Occidēns satiāverit: sōlī omnium opēs atque inopiam pārī adfectū concupīscunt. Auferre trucīdāre rapere falsīs nōminibus imperium, atque ubi sōlitūdinem faciunt, pācem appellant."

Tacitus, Agricola, 30 (abridged)

"As often as I survey the causes of this war and our current problems, I have a great spirit that today and your agreement will be the beginning of freedom for all of Britain: for you have come together and free from slavery, and no lands beyond, not even the sea, will be free while the Roman fleet threatens us. ... Now the uttermost parts of Britain lie exposed, and everything unknown seems great; but there is now no nation beyond us, nothing except waves and rocks, and the more hostile Romans, whose haughtiness you may flee in vain through obedience and self-restraint. These plunderers of the world investigate the sea after lands were lacking to them who were destroying everything. If the enemy is rich, they are greedy; if poor, they are ambitious. Neither East nor West will have satisfied them. Alone of all peoples they desire wealth and poverty with equal feeling. To carry off, to butcher, to take by force is power under false names, and where they create a wasteland, they call it peace."
